Catching a Bride.

Among certain Siberians the bride groom is not permitted to have a wife until he can catch her. But they do not give him a fair race in the open The bride, surrounded by her female friends, awaits him in a big tent. As on as she sees him she runs off. He follows like Hippomenes after Atalanta. But instead of obstacles being thrown in the way of the bride they are thrown across the path of the bridegroom. The pursuing groom falls over old women, chairs, tables, stones and fishing rods or is tripped up by ropes. Only when it is feared he might give up and sulk and go away without the fleeting lady is he permit ted to overtake her. Then as she falls into his outstretched arms it may be imagined she utters some equivalent of "This is so sudden!"

A Live Steak

"It is a mistake," said the president of the New York Waiters' club, "to think that an Englishman always wants his beef excessively rare. As a matter of fact, the English like their beef better done than we do. I one saw a waiter," he continued, "serve an English duke with a cut of very, very rare striotn. The duke looked closely at the slice of bright red meat. Then he said:

"He will not separate us—we have been so happy!" These were the last words of Charlotte Bronte when, having become Mrs. Nicholis and having lived with her husband only nine months, death came to snatch the cur of domestic felicity from the lips of the happy pair. A low, wandering de-lirium came on. Wakening for an instant from this stupor, she saw he husband's woe worn face and caught the sound of some murmured words of prayer that God would spare her "Oh," she whispered, "I am not going to die, am I? He will not separate us -we have been so happy!"

The Words That Won.

In London one of the weekly paper offered a prize for the best list of strong words to number ten. The announcement specified that but ten one person and a committee of literary men would select from the numbers offered the ten strongest words in the English language.

These are the words that won: Hate, blood, hungry, dawn, coming, gone love, dead, alone, forever.
